

THIRTEEN ROUNDS ON A PIER

TWO IRON MOULDERS SETTLE AN OLD GRUDGE IN THE RING

Fighting Fifty-seven Minutes between Fliers and Lumber—Bob Nash Knocked Insensible by Peter McCarthy—Jaw and Ribs Broken
For more than a year there has been

They are all young fellows, strong and ebullient, and their fights have been desperate affairs, revolvers and clubs often being used. Bob Nash and Pete McCarthy were particularly prominent in trying to settle old grudges, and as each had the reputation of being a bitter and deep fighter, it was expected that the two would fight each other and fight it out. The hatred and jealousy increased, and as they could keep cool no longer, a meeting was arranged. McCarthy has figured in many rough-and-tumble fights, and with the exception of being beaten once by Frank White, he was the victor. Nash, who is moulder, was looked upon as a clever man with a keen eye. It was known that the meeting had been arranged, Nash and McCarthy were the bets of his friends were quickly taken by McCarthy's friends. After the foundation was closed on Wednesday evening

[illegible]

In the third round Nash went to the scrats very slowly, evidently wanting to gain time. He put a knucker on McCarthy's jaw, and got a scarping wound in the ribs. Then Nash let go a powerful left-hander, but McCarthy ducked, and catching Nash around the waist threw him over his head. The time was eight minutes but the confidence of Nash's friends was unshaken.

In the fourth round McCarthy skipped around Nash.

The fifth round Nash was smiling when he advanced to the centre of the ring, notwithstanding the fact that he had been badly beaten in the previous rounds. McCarthy looked ugly, and he forced Nash into his corner and knocked him into his hands. The sixth round was short and effective, Nash was again badly beaten. In the seventh round, some heavy hitting was done, neither having the advantage. It was a very close round, but McCarthy was the victor by the advice of one of his seconds, let go to his right hand. The terrible force on Nash's shoulders was breaking his spirit, and he was suffering terribly. He dropped to avoid more punishment. The eighth round was short, and the rounds were short. Nash was on the defensive

NOT A FEW AFTER ALL.

Money to Bury a Gentle.

Several days ago the dead body of a man was found on the plank road near the Hackensack River. The body, which was described that of a Jewish peddler, was taken to Hoboken and placed in the hands of a peddler who that city employed Undertaker Crane to bury.

When the body was being prepared for interment yesterday morning, one of the workers suspected that the peddler was a Jew. He expressed his opinion to the undertaker, and the latter, who was of the same race, who had assembled to attend the funeral, was told that the body was not that of a Jew, but of a man named Crane, who was found that the body was not that of a Jew. There was a good deal of indignation at the burial of a Jew in a Christian cemetery, and the situation practiced upon them. Mr. Hauser, prominent Hebrew, called on the undertaker and expressed his opinion that the dead man was a Jew, and demanded from him the return of $15.50, paid by the peddler for the burial of the body. Mr. Crane refused to refund the money, and thereupon Mr. Hauser called on the city attorney, and the case was brought to the court, to recover the amount.
